Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints' Millennial Star, Vol. 76; April 2, 1914 In 1910 Utah had a population of about 75 per cent, of whom were Mormons. The percentage of illiterates, i.e., people over ten years of age who cannot read or write, in the State for the same year was per cent, and only per cent among native whites. Utah stands third among forty-eight states in the matter of illiteracy. The average for the United States for the same year was per cent. Utah spends more per capita on education than any other state, country or nation on the globe. In 1913, eighty per cent of the total revenues of the State were appropriated for educational pur poses. This does not include money spent by the Mormon Church and other denominational institutions in the State for the same purpose. The valuation of public school property in Utah has increased from in 1906, to in 1913, and 'the school population from to The amount expended annually for the support of common schools during the same period increased from to In addition to this the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints maintains two colleges and twenty-nine academies, with an enrollment of in 1913, with a large yearly expenditure for maintenance. Instruction in all state and Church schools is free. The birth-rate for the United Kingdom in 1911 was per thou sand. In the United States it was in the State of Utah and among the Mormon population in 1912 it was the death-rate for the United Kingdom in 1911 was per thousand. In the United States it was in the State of Utah it was and in 1912 among the Mormon population it was per thousand. Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints' Millennial Star, Vol. 71; April 8, 1909 It is the same with the Prophet Joseph Smith and the Latter-day Saints. It is the gospel of the Son of God, revealed anew in this last dispensation, that has made the name of that man immortal, and the saints the people that they are. Without it, in all proba bility the name of Joseph Smith would not have been known out side the locality in which he resided. Scarcely a day passes with out adding lustre to the name of the latter-day prophet, and as the years go by it will become more and more illustrious. It was the same with President Brigham Young. It was Mormonism, or the gospel of Jesus Christ, which made him the great and mighty man that he was. The-same may be said of all the succeeding presidents of the Church and also of the Latter-day Saints as a whole. In their lives the power of the gospel has been plainly made manifest. What a change the gospel of Christ has wrought in the lives of tens of thousands of men and women in these latter days; through obedience to its Holy principles they have been literally regenerated, born again, made new creatures in Christ Jesus, so that they are able to say with Paul, we are not ashamed of the gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation. How could we feel ashamed of that which has done so much for us! Well might the Savior say, He that is ashamed of me before men of him will I be ashamed before my Father and before the angels. What have we to be ashamed of, brethren and sisters? Nothing under the sun. On the contrary, we have much to -be proud of. IS the great revelation which the Father and the Son have given of themselves in this dispensation something, to be ashamed of? Verily, no. Think of the state of ignorance from which that glorious manifestation has delivered hundreds of thousands of the human family. What erroneous and absurd ideas we entertained concerning our Father in heaven before the glad tidings of that new revelation reached us. Before, we worshiped we knew not what; now we worship God intelligently, in Spirit and in truth. About the Publisher Forgotten Books publishes hundreds of thousands of rare and classic books. Proclaim Peace examines what it means to follow the Prince of Peace in a world of violence. The book seeks not to promote any particular ideology, but rather to invite readers, especially the rising generation, to reflect seriously on the interpersonal, ethical, and social dimensions of Christian discipleship. As such, it represents a spiritual journey by two believing scholars of peace that analyzes scripture and breathes new life into familiar and beloved Restoration texts.The Restoration encompasses a rich, if somewhat underappreciated, theology of peace. The heart of that theology is captured in a few core ideas: all humans are inherently divine and eternally interrelated, enduring power can only be achieved through persuasion and love, conflict is built into creation and can be constructively transformed for godly purposes. In a world plagued by violence, it is easy to see it as an inescapable part of the human condition. But Mason and Pulsipher believe, with President Russell M. Nelson, that "peace is possible" in this world and that the "descendants of Abraham . . . are in a pivotal position to emerge as peacemakers." This book is an effort to lift up the Restoration's distinctive principles that invite its followers and friends to renounce violence and proclaim Christ's good news of love and peace to a world that desperately needs it.

Excerpt from The Latter-Day Saints' Millennial Star, Vol. 89; June 17, 1926 Mormon Church was denied admission because it was regarded as not being a Christian church. Now it appears to me that with the facts, which are readily at hand and within reach of any investigator, it is easily seen that we are decidedly a Christian church. Ours is the only Church that bears the name of the Saviour. It is called the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and that alone, if we are sincere in our belief, and we are, is sufficient proof that we are Christians.
